Darling Wifie:-

Just received your darling little letter of Sunday, but, I am sorry to say, was just a bit disappointed, as I thought I would get a big fat one to-day, but I suppose I'll get it to-morrow, love, so I am satisfied.

Honey love, I am very, very busy, so this will have to be a short letter. I am sure that, though you will be disappointed in the shortness of this letter, you will be happy at the following news. I wrote you, honey love, about that case I got from the party against whom I originally had a claim and said I would charge $25 or $50, but I changed my mind and am going to charge $100.00, and am going to try and get some money on account to-morrow, if I can. I know that this will have to be paid monthly, as this man hasn't any money, but has a good job. Then, to-night, I must make out an income tax return, and will probably make $15.00 on that. As yet, Lovie dear, I haven't heard from Lowell Taylor about that proposition, but I still have hopes of getting it, and also the Notary Publicship.

To-morrow might I go up for initiation in the Masons. I was told that a very prominent man in Masonic circles is trying dog-gone hard for me, business and socially. Sure do hope I can get something out of him. Little by little, honey love, my practice is growing. In eleven days, have taken in $30. Not so bad, is it, Toots? Sure do hope it keeps up.

Lovie dear, I'll bet you worked hard at the wedding, didn't you? And how did they act down at the dispensary when you showed up the next day? Did they talk alot? You showed wrong if they did. How are you feeling, sweetheart mine? Love dearest, I sure do love you, and constantly I am thinking of you. I feel like writing a great deal to-day, but I can assure you that I haven't the time. I am keeping my promise, darling, and am at least letting you have a few words, so that you can have your mail as usual.

Shall close now, darling, with all my love, hugs, kisses and tender thoughts to you, my precious, darling wife,

Your Ever lovingly & terribly lonesome

Hubby
